

Put the special back into speciality

Anti-Infectives and Transplantation Medical Affairs

If your speciality is anti-infectives or transplantation, then this is an opportunity to join a major research-based pharmaceutical company and optimise your specialist expertise. Engaging at a peer-to-peer level, international key opinion leaders will trust and respect your medical leadership. A true expert in relation to your drugs and understanding what is important to the medical community, you'll be influencing how the drugs are used in the best possible way to achieve their true therapeutic value and ultimately deliver better patient outcomes.

substantial salaries and benefits

Senior Director, Medical Affairs – Anti-Infectives

Reporting to the VP, Medical Affairs & Health Economics and leading a seven-strong team, you'll provide the strategic medical input to the EMEA HQ brand teams and EMEA affiliates to realise the commercial potential of the anti-infectives portfolio. You'll also be responsible for medical information activities including managing and supporting medical affairs specialists.

Associate Director, Medical Affairs – Transplantation

Reporting to the Senior Director – Transplantation, you'll be actively involved with marketed drugs and also those in late-stage development. In addition to providing the medical and scientific input to the local affiliate medical teams to optimise commercial objectives for their own markets, you'll also be providing support, advice and guidance to your commercial colleagues.

With GMC or EU equivalent registration, whether you're still working in clinical medicine or are already a pharmaceutical physician this is not a place for generalists. It's why 'super speciality' is the byword for the 80-strong EMEA medical department. Nor is it just about the value of your experience and expertise today, because the company is actively committed to ensuring that you continue to up-skill your speciality into the future. But, just as important, it's about your passion, ideas, courage, energy and drive to personally make things happen. You go further, do more, set higher standards and achieve what others think is impossible because that defines the aims and aspirations of both you and this market-leading company.
